"The years draw nigh when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure."
Eccl. xii. 1.
Years are coming hither
When this heart to grieve,
Must I live with water,
Youth's away—away—
Men are brothers—brothers!
Oh! I tremble then
Least I lose what I have
Of my fellow-men.
Of those of whom and wrinkles,
Once were blithe as I;
Hence that poor besprinkled
Once looked kindly;
And where winter lingers
On the old man's curls,
Have played the taper fingers
Of well-beloved girls.
Oh, must the years come on me
When these are no delight,
Must frostwork fall upon me,
And death and blight;
This heart that loves the summer,
Be chilly as the cold,
And the dim, and dumber
Than the mummies of the Old?
And am I surely growing
In soul and senses dead,
Like him who, all unknowing,
Is frozen and congealed?

A DESOLATING SCOURGE.—The New-York Medical Gazette gives the following incidental notice of the epidemic which first gave rise to the internal use of Mercury for medicinal purposes:

Upward of a century ago, the American Colonies were the scene of one of the most dreadful epidemics which ever desolated a country. It was generally denominated the putrid sore throat, and it commenced its career in May, 1735, at Kingston, an inland town of New-Hampshire. From thence it spread itself gradually to the neighboring towns and villages. In the month of September of the same year, it reached Boston. Its progress westward was slow but uninterrupted. Nearly two years elapsed before it reached the Hudson river, from whence it continued to spread to the south and west, until it had involved the whole of the colonies in one common calamity. The numbers who fell victims to the disease were immense. Upon the population of New-England, more especially, it committed the most dreadful ravages. According to the account furnished by Dr. Douglass, a physician of Boston, it appears that one-fourth of the inhabitants of that place were seized with it, and of these, one in thirty-five died of it. In other places, he states that one-sixth, one-fourth, and even one-third of the sick fell victims to it. By Dr. Kearsley, an eminent practitioner of Philadelphia, an affecting account was left of its devastations. "Like most new diseases," says he, "it filled their constitution and nature are known, it swept all before it; it baffled every attempt to stop its progress, and seemed by its dire effects to be more like the drawn sword of vengeance to stop the growth of the colonies, than the natural progress of disease. In the New-England governments, the stroke was felt with the greatest severity; villages were almost depopulated, and parents were left to bewail the loss of their tender offspring, till Heaven, at last, the only marring physician, was pleased to check its baneful influence."

Belknap, in his history of New-Hampshire, states that in that province not less than one thousand persons died of the disease, of whom nine hundred were under twenty years of age.

It was in attempting to arrest the ravages of this dreadful epidemic, that mercury appears to have been first introduced into the treatment of inflammatory complaints.

ANECDOTE OF WILLIAM WIRT.—In a biographical sketch of this distinguished man, by the author of "Clinton Bradshaw," we find the following instance of his power and address as a legal advocate: "One of the most interesting cases ever witnessed at the Baltimore Bar, was a trial in a Mandamus case in which the right to a church was contested. Mr. Duncan had been established in the ministry in Baltimore by a number of Scotch Presbyterians, in an obscure edifice. His talents drew such a congregation that it soon became necessary to build a larger one. It was done; and in the progress of events the pastor preached a more liberal doctrine than he had at first inculcated. His early supporters remained, not only unchanged in their faith, but they resolved to have it preached to them by one with whom they could entirely agree upon religious matters. The majority of the congregation agreed with Mr. Duncan. A deep schism arose in the divided flock which could not be healed, and which was eventually, by a writ of mandamus, carried before a legal tribunal. Mr. Taney was counsel for the old school, and Mr. Wirt for the defendants. The court room during the trial, was crowded with the beauty and fashion of the monumental city. It was such a display of eloquence, and a full appreciation of it, as is seldom witnessed. Mr. Wirt was always happy in making a quotation, and in concluding this case he made one of his happiest. After alluding to the old school members, who, it has been said, were Scotchmen, and after dwelling upon the tragedy of Macbeth; the scenes of which are laid in Scotland, he described their preacher as being in the land of Macbeth's guest; and said, after a stern rebuke upon that, that though they should succeed in their cause, which he felt confident they would not, that they would feel like the guilty thanes:

"Beside this Duncan,
Hath borne his name so much, hath been
So clear in his great office, that his virtues
Will plead like angels trumpet-tongued, against
The deep damnation of his taking off."

The quotation was made with such oratorical effect, that there was a deep silence when Mr. Wirt took his seat, which was succeeded by repeated outbursts of applause. Mr. Wirt gained the cause."

A GREEN OLD AGE.—We were favored on Wednesday with a visit from John Rowlett, the distinguished author of Rowlett's Interest Tables, a work which we remember to have been first given to the world when we were a small boy, and the author of which we supposed, had long since been gathered to the home of his fathers. There is a probability that a business man in the Union, or in any other country where the English language is spoken, that has not heard of this volume, the most useful to the accountant that the world has ever produced; and none can have examined it without experiencing feelings of admiration for the talents, perseverance, and accuracy of its author. They will therefore be glad to hear that, although at the age of 69, he moves with the elastic step of a man of half his years, and that his conversational powers are marked with a fluency and propriety of expression rarely to be met with in any person. His health and sprightliness are doubtless to be attributed, in a great degree, to the staid and uniform habits of the Society of Friends, of which he is a member, but more, perhaps, to his own habits of extreme industry. His maxim is, "It is better to wear out than to rust out;" and of him it would seem to be physically true that "the more he is rubbed, the brighter he shines."

The work here spoken of was first printed about the year 1799, and has at the head of its list of subscribers, the names of John Adams, President of the United States, and Thomas Jefferson, Vice President. To the second edition, published forty years ago, an advertisement was attached offering a premium of 250 dollars for the detection of an error to the amount of one cent, and this standing premium has accompanied each subsequent edition. Eleven Legislative acts have been passed recommending the work, and so high is its reputation that whenever the editions have been exhausted, $25 have often been paid for a second-hand copy, though the first cost is but five dollars. On one occasion, in Clarke Co., Ia., a copy was put up at auction, and was struck off at 35 dollars. Mr. R. informed us that, although the work is now stereotyped, each form is examined seven times, employing four of the best arithmeticians in Philadelphia, before the sheets are permitted to go to the binder. As soon as the impression of any form is taken, four persons examine it, going over every calculation, and after the form is worked off three of these persons examine the last sheet in like manner. Should a figure become battered, whereby an 8 might be made to look like a 3, or vice versa; or a 9 like 0, the sheets are all cancelled, the error corrected, and the form worked over again. These pains-taking efforts have produced, what the world has probably not elsewhere seen, an infallible work, and well may the laborious author be remunerated.

NAPOLÉON built a great temple of delusion, in which, he, the priest, should continually shout "Glory," and all the people answer "Amen." His breast was a natural antitype and mirror of all the passions and follies of the fools called Frenchmen. By studying his own follies he knew what it was to pull to make their fool's bells jingle. He is therefore, of the weaknesses and wiser powers of man, the ablest metaphysician that has appeared. He was a poet in practice. Sydney's rule, "Fool! look into thine own heart and write," he obeyed; and wrote empires.
